

The History of the Seawanhaka Cup

Seawanhaka Cup

The Seawanhaka International Challenge Cup for Small Yachts

The Seawanhaka Cup, is the oldest yachting trophy, originating in the United States, that is still in active competition. Originated in 1895, the Seawanhaka Cup trophy was offered for the purpose of promoting small yacht racing and developing the Corinthian spirit among yachtsmen.

The original challenge was sailed in half-raters, a boat of about 15 feet, with the Seawanhaka boat Ethelwynn, designed by William P. Stephens sporting a marconi main over 20 years ahead of its time. Ethelwynn, raced by Bert C. Ball and crewed by Cornelius J. Field and Fred Field, won the regatta against a challenge from J. Arthur Brand of the Minima Yacht Club of England in Spruce IV.

In 1896, Clinton Crane represented Seawanhaka in a boat of his own design named EI Heirie against a challenge from the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club of Canada in a yacht named Glencairn sailed by G. Herrick Duggan of Montreal. Glencairn won and began a nine year winning streak for the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club.

In the 1898 competition between Seawanhaka and the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club, the Canadians put an inland lake scow with a tunnel hull by the name of Dominion on the line and were promptly protested: it was claimed that Dominion was a catamaran and did not, for that reason, measure in. Seawanhaka lost the protest and the regatta. Almost 100 years later, a “catamaran controversy” broke out in the America's Cup competition sparking international research of the Seawanhaka Cup records.

In 1905, the Manchester Yacht Club of Massachusetts challenged the Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club and won the regatta. The Royal St. Lawrence Yacht Club thereafter challenged the Manchester Yacht Club in 1910 unsuccessfully and the Seawanhaka Cup competition went dormant until the six metre era and the International Rule of yacht design.

In 1922, after sailing a match of the British American Cup at Oyster Bay, F. J. ('Wee John') Stephen of the Royal Northern Yacht Club of Scotland successfully challenged the Manchester Yacht Club in a six metre yacht of his own design Coila III. Wee John and the Royal Northern & Clyde Yacht Club sailing Coila III successfully defended the Seawanhaka Cup until 1925 when Clinton Crane returned to the competition in Lanai, another yacht of his own design. Twenty-nine years and fourteen matches after he had lost the Seawanhaka Cup, Clinton Crane and his Lanai won the cup back for Seawanhaka.

Norway first entered the fray in 1924, and went on to win the Seawanhaka Cup in 1927 with HRH Crown Prince Olav sailing Noreg. The Royal Northern & Clyde Yacht Club remained an active participant in the competition. In 1929 and 1931, eight metre yachts were sailed in the competition.

In 1932, the competition was back in six metre yachts. Great spectator fleets followed the competition. The Navy usually sent a large vessel to control the crowd. The media followed the competition closely through the late twenties and thirties. In the last competition before World War II, the Royal Northern Yacht Club sailing Circe successfully defended the Cup in a challenge from the Royal Norwegian Yacht Club or Norway sailing Noreg III.

The six metre era continued after the war until 1957 with Seawanhaka and the Royal Canadian Yacht Club winning challenges during that period.

In the early 60's, Seawanhaka successfully defended the Seawanhaka Cup in 5.5 metre yachts in two stirring matches. However, the "design duel" of this competition was losing interest and the 1971 challenge in celebration of Seawanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club's 100th Anniversary was sailed in the Soling, an internationally recognized one design class. Bob Mosbacher won the Cup for Seawanhaka that year. Buddy Melges defended the next challenge for Seawanhaka and Kalle Nergaard the next for Norway.

In 1987, a successful attempt was made at a revival of the six metres with a round robin series won by the Royal Yacht Squadron. In 1989, on the Solent in Dragons, the Royal Yacht Club of Tasmania won the challenge with eight straight firsts. In 1993, Nick Rogers of the Royal Yacht Club of Tasmania again won the series in a closely sailed regatta involving Laurence Mead of the Royal Hong Kong Yacht Club and Glen Foster of the Seawanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club.

In 1996, four yacht clubs from around the world convened at the home port of the Cup to challenge the Royal Yacht Club of Tasmania for the honor of winning the Cup. The match was sailed in Etchells. After a double round robin, the Royal Yacht Club of Tasmania and Seawanhaka met in a best of 3 final. After losing the first race, Seawanhaka's skipper, Jack Slattery defeated the Tasmanian skipper, Nick Rogers, in the final two races to bring the Cup home to Seawanhaka for the first time in 9 years.

In October 2004, competitors from all over the world sailed for the Seawanhaka International Challenge Cup for Small Yachts. Six clubs from both sides of the Atlantic, Canada and the Gulf Coast of the United States sailed for the 42nd Match. The Southern Yacht Club based in New Orleans won the cup after defeating the Royal Thames in the final races; three to one. The defending club, Seawanhaka, finished third.

In August 2005, hurricane Katrina destroyed the Southern Yacht Club's clubhouse in New Orleans and the original trophy was never recovered. Seawanhaka Corinthian Yacht Club commissioned an outstanding, full-scale replica from Langfords in London. The new trophy was completed and delivered to Seawanhaka in time for the 2009 competition.

The 2009 competition was held at Oyster Bay while Southern Yacht Club was rebuilding their clubhouse. Seawanhaka was victorious over five other teams with its member, Dave Perry as skipper, who is also a recognized coach for aspiring match racers.

In 2012, Southern Yacht Club with skipper Patrick Ryan wrested the title back from Seawanhaka and four other clubs. Returning to New Orleans in 2014, the competition shifted from Sonars to Flying Scotts. Skipper Chris Poole lead the Seawanhaka team to victory, beating six other experienced teams.

2017 saw the competitors return to the waters of Oyster Bay but this time the racers competed in Match 40 class sailboats.

Seawanhaka with Chris Poole again as skipper, won over seven teams from Canada and the United States.

With the anticipated 47th match for the Cup to be sailed in Oyster Bay in 2019, the words of Seawanhaka’s first Commodore, William L. Swan, still ring true. They were delivered in his final speech as Commodore.

“Prosecute vigorously the popularization of Corinthian races with which Seawanhaka is so closely identified, as I feel assured it will not only be to it a tower of strength, but also that it is the only true and enjoyable kind of yachting.”

The following is a list of all the previous matches, the yacht clubs involved, the challenging yacht’s name, and the helmsman where known.
